

Abstract

The invention relates to a device for transforming liquids having different viscosity into droplets. The inventive system is characterized by differently designed air nozzles which are devoid of moving parts. Due to its modular architecture the system can be operated with any of the nozzles and different individual components as required, which ensures a maximum flexibility.